Special Thanks

This show is dedicated to Maureen Delvina Byrnes. Thank you for being a hilarious, terrifying, loving, inappropriate, encouraging, wild, complicated mother to me. Thank you, grief. You are a powerful teacher, and I continue to be tenderized by you.

Thank you, Mandy, for many years of amazing lighting, brilliant creative intuitions, and the best hugs ever. Nick and Jake, I cannot believe I have the luck of collaborators as kind and visionary as you—I hope for a lifetime of thinking together. Thank you, Andrew, for jumping into this crazy world with so much spirit and making it sound damn good. Thank you, Sacha, for the spark in your eye when I told you that I thought this work might be a solo, and for your vision and encouragement—you have been the perfect doula for this show. Thank you, Jesse, our brilliant and sensitive eyes on this work and on the whole series; you are forever my chad. Connie, for holding me through this, pushing me to go to the mall, and meeting me in the fish house. Amanda, for your vision and gentle push to get at the heart of the matter with the text. Dages, for being an inspiration from across the continents and then jumping in last minute to be a body double and eye to the work. George, for being a producer/manager who sends me poetry, you have a heart of gold. Lawrie and Ginger Driscoll, for your ongoing love and support. Rascal, you are my heart manifest in physical form.

Jed, for your profound generosity and vision. To the entire Montclair team, to Chuck and Lane at the Wexner Center for the Arts, Philip and Simone at Walker Art Center, and to Pam at Jacob's Pillow for your support and commitment to making Space with me.

Program Notes

"Loss is transformative, in good ways and bad, a tangle of change that cannot be threaded into the usual narrative spools. It is too central for that. It's not an emergence from the cocoon, but a tree growing around an obstruction."

—Meghan O'Rourke

Space confronts what is simultaneously the most certain and uncertain of human states, our undoing and our final flourishing. It is a reckoning with the fact that one being's transition from the state of the living calls forth a concurrent transition in those not dead.

The work exists next to a legacy of production of the body in figuration, in image. We love to make pictures of ourselves and always have—from scratches on a cave wall to our Instagram feeds. But Space draws the figure through invisible forms—weight, touch, and smell—and paints the body as a nexus that only flickers into being in a never-ending, nonstop relationship. Never in a frame.

Space speaks in bewilderment. It conjures the inevitable forces of loss and grief, which undermine our narratives of progress, of growth, of what it means to be productive, and of what it means to be. How do I reproduce you, talk about you now that you are gone? How do I hold that which can never be captured? In the face of these forces, how do we care for what cannot be quelled? How do we comfort what has no remedy?

We reach out, knowing we remain alone. We share our isolation in what cannot be articulated. We feel it. We believe it. We witness it. No more. We are in the change.

About the Series

Faye Driscoll's most recent body of work, the Thank You For Coming series, extends the sphere of influence of performance to create a communal space where everything is questioned, heightened, and palpable. Space is the final work in this critically acclaimed trilogy, which also includes the earlier works Attendance (2014) and Play (2016).

Following the creation and premiere of Space at Peak Performances, this and the other works in the series will take on a new iterative life, presented in vibrant, dissonant relationship to one another through ambitious exaggeration of scale, duration, archive, and community.
